With His Wife, At Last!

Rapid Succession of Tragedies in a Three Months Honeymoon with a Final Climax Stranger Than a Stage Melodrama.

"I forbid this marriage—I am his wife!" Mrs. Sanborn screamed.

"Too late, Madame, but he shall be put under arrest for bigamy," said Judge Cummings.

"Arrested? Sent to prison? My poor, dear Lawrence! No, no! I have told a lie: I am not his wife. I have no claim on that man; let him go!" and Mrs. Sanborn sank to the floor in a swoon.

Heavily, he tore himself away from the blonde woman and hurried to the hotel where he directed his bride and her. All their friends knew of the scene that followed in that it resulted in a reconciliation that meant more to both of them than even their marriage and honeymoon.

Nothing more was heard of the Lawrence Sanborns until they were arrested in Austin, Texas, at a railway crossing, and a young man and woman were shown from a fashionable wagonette and severely injured.

The young couple, it was learned, had traveled under the name of "Mr. and Mrs. Stuart," of New York, at the hotel where they had been living. But when the police examined letters and papers which had dropped from the man's pocket, they learned that he was Lawrence R. Sanborn, of Boston.

Up-to-the-moment consciousness in the hospital Sanborn admitted his identity. He readily said that he took an enough name to select his wife from the society caused by his New Orleans indiscretion. He declared that his second marriage was a desperate mistake. He had been drugged and mesmerized, he said, and was not responsible at the time.

Lawrence Sanborn's devotion to his wife alone leaving New Orleans is described as a lie. He has been nursing her back to health since the unfortunate accident. He said that he had been nursing her back to health since the unfortunate accident. He said that he had been nursing her back to health since the unfortunate accident.

There is not the slightest doubt that as fast as she falls in love with his wife.

How You May Now Walk With a Broken Leg.

Modern surgery is constantly doing the lower extremity and disposes of the exact size of the limb. From the cast a model is made in rubber and on this the better cast is made. It is impossible, of course, to mould the dry leather on the plaster so that it will follow the shape, but this difficulty is surmounted by soaking the leather in water.

In order to make sure that these rubber casts are strong enough, especially in the case of rubber casts, the leather is imbedded in the leather. These rubber casts are not made of leather, but of a material that is much stronger than leather, and that on removal the limbs are not distorted. A long, straight, polished, in the line of the limb.

It is useful mainly in two conditions—

ERE, at last, in real life, is the heroine for whom the stage and novelists have sought in vain. She is beautiful, of course, but so devoted, so forgiving, so self-sacrificing, in circumstances that either break the hearts of ordinary men or transform them into heroes, that she is the first of classical heroines of the age.

And now she lies broken and bandaged, so that not a hint of her beauty is visible. It may never be again—in a dark room in Austin, Tex., victim of a railway accident, the latest of a series of remarkable misadventures. But never in all her life was she so happy, for she knows that the always young man sitting beside her loves her truly, absolutely and forever, because he never can forget the sacrifice she made to save him from just punishment for the cruellest of injuries to her.

Imagine a beautiful, spirited girl, a bride with her honeymoon just three months old, accepting her husband in the act of marrying another woman! To save him from jail as a bigamist, imagine her instantly declaring that she is not his wife!

Then when she goes quietly away, forgetting her husband's ingratitude, for his sake, imagine his availing himself of the opportunity to marry her again, and imagine her devotion to him, and imagine his transformation at that thought, and his haste to throw himself at the feet of the woman compared to whom all other women were but shadows.

Imagine this, and you will understand the plot of this story, and you will understand the plot of this story, and you will understand the plot of this story.

And, and a Football Celebrity, and a Football Celebrity, and a Football Celebrity, and a Football Celebrity, and a Football Celebrity.

And, and a Football Celebrity, and a Football Celebrity, and a Football Celebrity, and a Football Celebrity, and a Football Celebrity.

It did not take people of her home town long to discover that she was the most beautiful girl in Lowell. She was eagerly sought after to grace social functions and to take part in private theatricals. Naturally, she had innumerable suitors.

But Dorothy Gordon's character, even at sixteen, began to display itself. The devotion and heroism which had led her to a New Orleans court a few weeks ago, when she defied her identity to save her husband from imprisonment, showed itself when she was a schoolgirl.

One blustery Autumn afternoon, when she had driven her spirited high-stepping horse over to Andover in a sulky trap, accompanied by a girl friend, she had been in the company of a young man, a member of the Hopkinton School football team, that played a winning game against the Phillips Andover Academy boys that afternoon.

Both Loved at First Sight. Sanborn at first sight was fascinated by Dorothy Gordon's beauty and grace. There began a courtship which lasted two years. Dorothy Gordon was not really won, yet from the day she met young Sanborn she accepted attention from no one else. Loyalty was the keynote of her character.

Her father knew this, and feared that the idle, society-loving Sanborn would not be true to his daughter as she would be to him.

Further, there was opposition from his family. He had dared to choose a bride for his daughter, and he had dared to choose a bride for his daughter, and he had dared to choose a bride for his daughter.

When it was all over the happy young couple returned to Boston. This was on December 2. They made their temporary residence at the Hotel Touraine, one of Boston's most fashionable hotels.

The next day he was found dead. In his room, the doctors said it was apoplexy, but his friends knew it was from a blow over his daughter's future and a broken heart.

Word was sent to the Sanborns at the Hotel Touraine, Boston, of Mr. Gordon's death. But the Sanborns had gone South, by one of the many boats, and soon to the house where she had stayed with her husband.

By the time the young bride arrived at her home in Lowell, she found her husband dead. She found her husband dead, and she found her husband dead.

When it was all over the happy young couple returned to Boston. This was on December 2. They made their temporary residence at the Hotel Touraine, one of Boston's most fashionable hotels.

Young Sanborn promptly introduced his beautiful young wife to his friends, and they all loved her. She was a beautiful young woman, and she was a beautiful young woman.

On a certain day he expected the young couple, and went to the railway station to meet them. They did not come, but a messenger for him. He went back to his hotel heartily.

Then the bride's father awaited her proudly to visit to him at Lowell with effusive joy. On a certain day he expected the young couple, and went to the railway station to meet them. They did not come, but a messenger for him. He went back to his hotel heartily.

The "Loop-the-Loop" Circus feat

THE "loop-the-loop" feat which the dare-devil bicyclist at the circus showed up last year was thought to be probably the limit of human possibilities in this direction. But the ambitious performer have found that they can go on "loop-the-loop" one better. In fact, the opening night of the Brough & Bailey Circus at Madison Square Garden, New York, revealed four astonishing bicycle feats which thrilled and amazed everybody.

It is a curious fact that it was the science editor of La Nature, one of the foremost scientific papers in France, who pointed out the entire practicability of two of these spectacular stunts. Interested in the feat, he sent the scientific principle upon which the "loop-the-loop" act was accomplished.

The scientist went further, and showed that still more remarkable exploits were possible. And two of the new feats at the circus are based upon these scientific suggestions.

Starting high up near the roof of the Garden, the bicyclist comes charging down a steep incline, gathering force with every yard until almost at the floor level, when the track takes a sharp curve upward for a few feet, and then ends abruptly. A gap of forty-two feet occurs here in the bicycle path, and beyond this open space the track continues once more.

Down comes the bicyclist to the bottom of the incline, and then up the few feet of sharp rise, and then—leaving the wall of the bicycle path—the performer and bicycle shoot straight off into the air and across the forty-two feet of missing track, landing an instant later on the continuation of the bicycle path leading gently to the floor of the arena.

Another surprising feat is a variation of the quite well known "loop-the-loop" act. This time, though, the bicyclist comes down the incline at great speed, strikes the loop, and instead of travelling around the continuous circle of solid bicycle track, leaps across a section of the loop at the top which has been taken away. In other words, the daring performer has found that with just enough of the round loop to give the bicycle the proper direction, the machine will travel on through the air without a track.

Always at Home on Wheels.

Away up near the steel rafters of the Madison Square Garden roof Miss Nellie Carroll, a rather pretty young woman, makes her bicycle go back and forth on a steel wire, doing things on her bicycle most which seem incredible enough to the old-fashioned circus performer on a wire before the days of the bicycle. This young woman is perhaps the most expert bicycle performer in the world, and ever catches his bicycle wonder which has been found possible she does with cheerful confidence.

The rather remarkable instantaneous photographs on this page show various stages of the "loop through space" performance. Of the four quite different bicycle stunts of this year's circus, the premier and during act here illustrated is perhaps the most graceful and picturesque, although perhaps no more difficult than either of the other three. The fourth, which has not yet been mentioned, is the multiple feat in which, standing upon the protruding hub of a single wheel, the performer rides down a ladder carrying another performer on his shoulders.

The audience at the Madison Square Garden seem to find peculiarly fascinating the feat in which the rider, while in a gap in the track, thus making part of the journey in mid air. They realize that here skill and nerve are combined with the use of a most interesting scientific principle.

As pointed out by the editor of La Nature, the same principle which makes "looping the loop" possible, ensures equal success in "looping the gap." The momentum gained within the loop late centrifugal force—as when a weight attached to a string is swung around in a vertical circle, except that the solid boundary of the bicycle loop takes the place of the string and holds the bicycle to its circular course.

Science Gave Him the Cue.

Acting on the hint of the scientist, the "loop-the-loop" performer began experimenting with a gap at the top of the loop there to hold the wheel while the start is being made. It seems incredible that thus alone the rider can get a true start for the serious journey.

Every movement is deliberate. The wheel seems to share the determination of the rider. It starts slowly, and the rider can see the performer moving the handlebars slightly, the front wheel clearing, as though to make sure that there would be no difficulty about starting the precipitous course.

Although the descent, the leap and the final landing upon the first part of the arena, occupy only the fraction of a minute, the gravity and attention of the audience are so keen that every foot of the journey seems to have its special significance.

It is even that the rider, with hands gripping is steering every inch of the course as though it were a level road.

Steering That is Wonderful.
The fact that a half inch too much change of the position of the handlebars one way or the other would mean disaster at any stage of the downward plunge does not seem to discourage the rider in the least.

Down the plunge, too as a die. At the upward curve one can see the knees stiffen and the body bend slightly forward. Up into the air above the gap the rider shoots, and almost seems to hang there an instant, so deliberately is the attitude changed at each stage of the aerial course.

The continuation of the track is so near parallel with the downward part of the curve through the air that only a slight bend is heard as the wheels strike. Then a short across the arena, until the wheel's momentum is overcome, and the rider, lacking pedals, dismounts and walks away, receiving acknowledgments to the applauding audience.

While it is apparent that these new variations of "looping the loop" are recognized by both audience and the circus manager as the great drawing feature of the show, it is a curious fact that three in-act performers, whose headwinds are seen to be begun and ended in three or four minutes, have no particular "professional standing" in the whole company of performers. The largest artists, the riders and tumblers, even the clowns, rise then as "freaks."

Before the act is announced the audience area the wheel waiting its intended rider on the balcony at the top of the steep incline. The inclined track is perfectly flat laterally and about three yards broad. If the upward curve at the bottom, near the floor level of the arena, were at an angle, it would be a right angle, or nearly so—that is, the short upward incline is about equal to the loop downward one. Then there is an open space of 42 feet, and the track continues at about the same level that it stopped at the near side of the gap. It descends gently to the floor, and is finally pedaled, the upper end being slightly curved downward, so though to prevent the first wheel from striking an abrupt edge, in case the leap fell a trifle short.

Preparations for the act are full of thrilling anticipation. The performer mounts the track at the lowest part of the incline, and waits upward, at each step testing the tautness of the structure.

At the top the performer seizes the waiting wheel and places it on the centre of the track between two low blocks about 15 inches apart, since the handle bars and mounts the blocks, being now outside the wheel. Courtesy in expectation we can be leaving the detectives as much in the dark as ever. William Arthur Micholtrre, a young man residing near the tower, was arrested while at Clendenen's funeral. The only reason for his arrest was that the last four letters of his name were identical with those freely ticked out by the dying operator. There was no evidence against Micholtrre, and he was released without even the formality of a hearing.

It was even suggested that perhaps Clendenen did not send the last part of his death message—the part which caused the arrest of Micholtrre, part of whose name could be spelled with the letters caught over the wire. A possible explanation of this was that the murderer, if he were an operator, arrived at the tower with the spike man just as Clendenen had finished telling of the shooting and brained him, then grasped the key and transmitted a deep name which would keep the officers off his own track until he should escape. When the railroad crew arrived at the tower the switch of the telegraph instrument was closed. A wounded man who dragged himself from the floor to send such a message and was interrupted by the return of his assistant would hardly have closed that switch. He would have left it open if only to let other operators know that something was wrong.

Butting as the number of Clendenen was, it seemed no more mysterious than the other daring hold-ups and murderous attacks upon other men employed like Clendenen at isolated stations and signal towers along the railroads of New Jersey and Pennsylvania. With the confession of Mrs. Jamison the mysteries promise to be speedily cleared up. The police believe she has not yet told one-half of what she knows about her husband's connection with Clendenen's murder and the other crimes which followed so closely upon his death.

Carefully cut out Happy Hooligan, the two wings and back rib. Put a piece of thread through hole A in Hooligan's vest, pull it through three quarters of an inch and paste to the back with a small strip of paper. Bend back rib along dotted lines, as shown in small diagram B, and paste right down the middle of Hooligan's back from head to feet. Next paste the wings as indicated by letters, E to E, D to D, and so on, letting the wings bow up. Pass the ends of four pieces of thread, each 12 inches long, through the four holes J and paste down at back with paper strips. Bring the five threads to a centre about 10 inches from knee, having the two top threads shorter than the two lowest ones, so that the kite in flying will lean forward, just as every well-rigged kite should do. Use a spool of thread for a kite string and fly Happy Hooligan just as you would an ordinary kite. If he wobbles or tries to turn somersaults in flying, tie a short piece of string to his feet to act as a tail, and if he still wobbles after that, tie a little bow of paper to the end of the string. Mr. Hooligan will fly just as high as your spool of thread will let him.

Are You One of the Sheep That Follow?

COURTESY THE N. Y. H. BOARD.

Lack of Originality, of Initiative, Is the Peculiarity of Sheep and of Men. We Follow Whatever Leads Us, and Progress Is Slow

HIS picture by Arthur Young is one that really needs no words of explanation.

Every reader—the majority, at least—will supply, better than will be done here, the meaning and the truth which the picture presents.

Our efforts, our movements, physical and mental, are directed by our minds. And our minds, as wise men tell us, follow always THE LINES OF LEAST RESISTANCE.

We go along the path most easily followed. And, to save the trouble of mapping out a course for ourselves, we follow others.

Human beings pride themselves on their individuality. Each man would be offended if told that he resembled all other men, and had no qualities peculiar to himself.

Yet how much alike we all are, how universally we follow the example, the path and the methods of others, instead of striking out in directions of our own.

If we buy a hat, we are satisfied with the clerk's assurance that the thing which we have bought is "what everybody is wearing now." The same is true of all the other things that we buy.

In politics, the vast majority of men want to belong to the winning party. They want to follow the leader.

In society, men and women are humbly and pathetically anxious for the approval of the leader. He or she may be old, unoriginal, foolish—but still they follow.

In business, men follow each other, doing the same old things in the same old way, and failing because they follow instead of learning to lead.

In journalism, an endless succession of poor stragglers have tried to succeed by doing the same old thing over and over. They follow the leader persistently, although they follow him to failure.

There is no doubt that mental sluggishness, lack of capacity for trying new fields on one's own account, fear of the unknown, keeps us all followers of those that have gone before.

The progress of the world really depends on the successful fighting of this sheep-like instinct that makes us followers of one another.

All the successful men have been those who branched out, taking paths of their own. It is true that they have been successful men, but usually unhappy men. It is our cowardice, our dread of adventure and of contest, our love of ease and safety, that make us follow in the old, beaten paths.

Fortunately it can be said that of late years—and especially in America—men are becoming less like sheep and more like human beings, at least in the intellectual field.

We are producing constantly inventors who refuse to take the old paths, political and social thinkers who believe that a thing is not necessarily good because it has been done ten thousand times before.

But this rebellion of the human mind against accepted habits is slow and painful at the best.

When a man is ill and weak, he needs his full supply of blood to give him strength. Yet for centuries upon centuries men were bled when they were ill, endless thousands and millions of them were bled to death. The habit was kept up because it was a habit, and those who tried to stop it were looked upon as enemies of mankind.

We all talk of "the good old way, the wisdom of the ancients." As far back as the days of Queen Elizabeth this nonsense about "the wisdom of the ancients" was punctured by Bacon, the intelligent, unscrupulous, gigantic genius, whose blood, much diluted, is shared by Balfour, the present Prime Minister of England.

Bacon said very truly to the world that WE ARE THE ANCESTERS.

By that meant that we who live today are the OLD inhabitants of the earth. The human race began long ago, and those of us who first appeared here were the YOUNG, not the OLD, members of the human race.

WE ARE THE OLD ONES. For years and centuries and scores of centuries human beings have lived here, storing up knowledge, learning by experience, timidly venturing into new fields and solving new problems.

WE WHO LIVE TODAY ARE THE OLDEST OF HUMAN BEINGS. We have been longest upon the earth—we know more than the others.

And we can best show the results of our knowledge by acting like men, not like sheep, and following the guidance of our intelligence instead of the foolish traditions of the past.

All that is really valuable in the world is ORIGINAL THOUGHT.

The old ideas keep us going along in the old way. The old methods are useful simply as makeshifts. But it is only the new thought that moves us forward, solving our problems and taking us out of difficulties, in the sheep-like age of submissive following.

There are a million young men and a million old men in America wondering what makes success, wondering why they have failed, why they have not advanced.

ORIGINALITY MAKES SUCCESS. Originality—of the wrong kind—also makes failure and disaster.

But originality alone means progress; it alone raises a man out of the rut; it alone lifts the human race one step upward in its conquest of material and mental problems here.

Most of us follow, as sheep follow any leader, taking what comes and approving of ourselves heartily.

Yet we owe all that we have to those that leave us to follow, and that get out to new fields of their own.

To the inventors, the brave men who endured want and contempt and lack of appreciation, we owe all that we have.

Those of us that want to do any work worth while, to take our share in the real work, must get out of the sheep class and try, however feebly, to map out a course of our own.

Patriotism, True and False Its Evolution Toward Love for All Humankind. By Max Nordau.

To the patriotic leagues of the different countries, no matter whether they are known as Jingoists, Chauvinists, Panglossians, Panslavists, Imperialists or Boxers, the word patriotism means contempt and hatred of all who do not belong to their particular country.

Patriotism, as these people see it, means jealousy, sickly and abnormal susceptibility and lack of consideration to others; it means the fiercest egotism, total disregard of every law which tends to limit their own desires.

This kind of patriotism glorifies as supreme virtues of a collective society greed, drunkenness or crime.

As intolerable and unchangeable in the mind of moral laws, one kind for individuals, another for nations, and everybody should strive to arrive at this conclusion, which to my mind seems so very simple, that what is inadmissible between man and man is equally so between two nations.

But as far as I have spoken only of one kind of patriotism, the false patriotism. There is, however, another kind, the patriotism which may be defined as the noble feeling with the worst form of barbarism, and it love which we instinctively have for the in the plain duty of every man who believes in progress to fight against it as he would fight against superstition, ignorance, brutality, drunkenness or crime.

It is clearly illogical to have two kinds of patriotism, one for individuals and one for nations, as a precious inheritance.

It is perfectly natural that we should feel proud of and love the glorious history of our country, that we should love its institutions, laboriously built up by generations of our ancestors, its language, its literature and a number of other natural and material benefits which are our just patrimony.

This noble form of patriotism is the true love we feel for the horizons which have framed our first impressions in the days of childhood, for the surroundings which have seen rise the dreams of our youth and the ambitions of our manhood, and which is at the same time the love we feel for the bright future of our country, which we have colored with the brightness of youthful enthusiasm.

This patriotism is so natural, so grand, so noble and so selfless, that it is the only one that should be cultivated.

It is perfectly natural that one must be in the place where one was born and brought up, that would be the same as not to love one's own youth.

But patriotism is something more than a normal being's feeling of love for the place of his birth. It is the concrete form of the love we feel for the horizons which have framed our first impressions in the days of childhood, for the surroundings which have seen rise the dreams of our youth and the ambitions of our manhood, and which is at the same time the love we feel for the bright future of our country, which we have colored with the brightness of youthful enthusiasm.

This patriotism is so natural, so grand, so noble and so selfless, that it is the only one that should be cultivated.

It may not yet have reached far enough to signify an ideal tie between all members of the great human family, but it is a step toward it.

The feeling of solidarity with all human kind is not yet strong enough to inspire to noble efforts and sacrifices, but it is growing, advancing by progressive stages.

This patriotism is so natural, so grand, so noble and so selfless, that it is the only one that should be cultivated.

Its poetical incarnations are Prometheus and Christ, who both lived and died for this idea of universal love, but they have so far had no imitators or followers.

I have, however, a feeling of contempt for those who pretend to be filled with enthusiastic love of humanity, but who begin with turning their backs upon that part of humanity which is closest and most familiar to them.

These so-called humanitarianism always remind me of the misers who disinherit their wives and children and will their fortunes to public institutions, and who should rightly be classed with insane persons.

A human solidarity which is not first a national solidarity is always suspicious because it does not follow Nature's law of evolution, advancing by progressive stages.

MODEL MAN GIVES GIRLS LEAP YEAR CHANCE

Denver, March 28.—This is just the saddest case—terribly and so a young man who wants to get married but can't. His parents don't object; he doesn't object; no one objects but—

"I cannot say that about the young ladies of Rout County. I have given them the opportunity to be married, but so far the present time there is none who will come forward."

There are many reasons why they do not go to church, as I am sure a society could secure old strong, healthy men a good deal of pleasure and profit by having them go to church, have a fairer good education and will inherit considerable property in their near future, and I am sure they all must know I desire a wife.

"Now, if you will please make my wants known to the ladies of your city who want to get married can write me, I promise to answer them as soon as I can. Very truly yours, WILLIAM F. PARKER

The horses had to go twenty miles to feed, and since the weather was so cold, I was glad to have a cheerful smile as he could summon his weary and careworn countenance. "The weather is getting milder now," he was uncomfortable. "The horses are covered out and all along the way the people have been very good to me. I am not afraid of work. At Bowling Green I averaged 45 cents a day, and that is not enough to live on. I am getting on especially when the four are all healthy and have good appetites."

Cast Aside Veil of Her Order for

Des Moines, Iowa, March 26. While teaching music in the parochial school at Burlington, Sister Aurelie fell in love with Harold Stevenson, one of her older pupils. The sequel was an elopement to Chicago, where the beautiful young woman has cast aside the veils of her order for those of bride and has foreworn the vows which she made to the church.

Stevenson stood separation as long as he could, then went to Cedar Rapids, where he managed to communicate with her. Under cover of darkness, after all had retired, she stole down the fire escape to the waiting arms of her sweetheart, and together they boarded a fast train for Chicago.

This is the most comprehensive collection of music in existence. It contains 2,200 pages of sheet music. The volumes are specially bound, so they open flat at the piano. Such composers are represented as Wagner, Liszt, Faderweert, Sullivan, Mozart, Handel, Chopin, De Koven, Strauss and Gounod. The work contains 300 instrumental selections by the best composers, including popular and operatic melodies, dances, funeral marches and classic and romantic piano music. There are 350 best old and new songs, duets, trios and quartets. Among the selections are 100 new and copyrighted pieces of music by American composers. As a musical cyclopedia it is unexcelled, for it contains 500 biographies of musicians and 400 portraits, many of them in color. It also contains chromatic art plates in colors. The volumes are handsomely bound in art cloth and half-leather. In number of pages of sheet music, in number of biographies and in number of illustrations this Musical Library leads all others.

Some months ago our Mutual Library Club purchased an entire new edition of the "World's Best Music" at a very low price. The Club has offered these sets of this edition at about one-half the publisher's regular prices—but the edition is now nearly exhausted and the Club is closing. If you reply promptly to this advertisement you can obtain a set through the Club for $25.00 in half-leather binding or $21.00 in cloth binding—payable $1.00 down and the balance in 10 weekly payments of $2.00 each. The sets have been sold for years at the regular prices of the sets are $35.00 and $40.00. We will send a set to any address (express paid by you) on receipt of your examination and use. Emerson Hough, author of "The Mississippi Bubble," a history of that mad swindle which has been read by thousands, has written this scathing arraignment of the Beef Trust in his own scabbiest style for the BOSTON AMERICAN.

going in to about 17. We are getting a bag of net down in the case.

We are a strange people we Americans—the most enlightened and the most ignorant in the world; the most energetic and the most apathetic, the most hysterical and the most sensible, the bravest and the most cowardly.

Are these statements of any interest to the public?

Yes, for they are one of a great deal of things of as much interest to you and many thousands of others as they are to myself. Why? Let us see.

The pending complaint, better known as the "Cattle Case," is the first instance of industrial interests under the several names of Armour & Co., Swift & Co., Kellogg & Co., and the Chicago Cattle Co., and Schlusenscheidt & Sulzberger, yesterday raised the price of beef again.

Now, this cutting of your money was not done in 1907.

Look up the court records of the City of Chicago, and the answer is plain. It is the rate of the stock market, not the rate of the cattle market, that has made the beef trade for something in recent years a business of the first importance.

And the words of the decision were:

"There can be no doubt that the agreement between the defendants to refrain from selling any of their cattle for less than the price of the cattle in combination in restraint of trade is a violation of the Sherman law."

Cost of Living Increased. "It costs me, as I personally know, thirty-three per cent. more to live now than it did in the same part of New York years ago," said a merchant, "and the same is true of prices to stimulate shipping, intending to come from bludging when the shipments have arrived."

A KNOWLEDGE of Shakespeare's plays is essential to the well-informed man or woman, but the ordinary edition is so defective in Notes and Glossaries that reading the plays becomes a difficult task instead of an enjoyable entertainment.

The New International Edition makes Shakespeare's plays pleasant reading. It has been edited and produced along modern lines and with the idea of giving the reader all the "helps" possible. It reproduces the famous Cambridge text—for forty years the most accurate text of the plays—to which have been added copious Notes, Comments and Glossaries explaining every difficult passage and obsolete word. For the purpose of acquiring a real and practical knowledge of Shakespeare's works this edition is far superior to every other edition in existence.

The International Edition embodies all these features and many more that are equally excellent. It is so far superior in all essential respects to other editions that we believe it to be the best Shakespeare ever published. It should be in every library, and a point to be remembered is that you can secure a set by paying $1.00 after examination. If you mail us the Coupon in the lower right-hand corner at once, it will entitle you to a set at half-price. The books will be sent you, express prepaid, for examination.

ASTS IN 13 ILLUSTRATED VOLUMES

7,000 LARGE PAGES

The International Edition is the latest and best Shakespeare, and the only one that has been planned for busy people as well as for scholars, with the idea of making the reading of Shakespeare a pleasure. It will cost you three or four dollars more than an inferior set—but it is worth half a dozen ordinary cheap editions. It reproduces the famous Cambridge text, which has a world-wide reputation of being the most accurate text of Shakespeare's works. Everything that Shakespeare wrote is given complete, including the Sonnets and Poems. It contains 400 illustrations, art plates in colors, rare wood-cuts, and photographs. The sets are in 13 volumes—8 x 5½ inches in size, and are handsomely bound in half leather and cloth. With the exception of a much more expensive edition in 40 volumes.

Critical Comments: This is the only edition containing Critical Comments on the plays and characters selected from the writings of eminent Shakespearean scholars. These comments make clear the larger meaning of the play and the nature of the characters.

Arguments: Preceding each play is an analysis of the play called an "Argument"—written in an interesting story-telling style. If you do not care to read the entire play, you can read its plot and the development of its story through the Argument.

Complete Glossaries: These give the meaning of every obsolete or difficult word. No other edition contains Glossaries as complete and full as these, and no other edition contains the Glossaries in the same volumes as the plays.

Two Sets of Notes: This is the only edition published that gives two full sets of Notes in connection with each play—Explanatory Notes for the average reader and Critical Notes for the critical student or scholar.

A Life of the Poet: No other edition contains so much interesting material concerning Shakespeare himself. There is a life of Shakespeare by Dr. Israel Gollancz, with critical estimates of his character and genius by Walter Bagehot, Leslie Stephens, and other writers.

Study Methods: This edition contains a complete Method of Study for each play, consisting of Study Questions and suggestions—the idea of the editors being to give in the set a college course in Shakespeare study.

There are only a few hundred sets of our special Club edition remaining for distribution through our Shakespeare Club, and we are obliged to place a limit on the half-price offer. It means that if you send us your order promptly you can obtain a set of this splendid Shakespeare at one-half regular prices, but if you do not we cannot give the advantage of the Club prices. The prices through the Club are $23.00 for a set in half-leather binding and $19.00 for cloth binding, payable at the rate of a $1.00 a month. The regular prices of this edition are $44.00 and $36.00. This advertisement will not appear again, so, to be sure of a set, cut out the coupon, sign it and mail it to us to-day. We will mail you a set, express prepaid, for examination, and if it is not satisfactory you may return it at our expense, or you may retain it by paying $1.00 within five days and $1.00 a month thereafter until the full amount is paid.

FREE Each subscriber for this edition will receive, free, a complete Topical Index of Shakespeare's Works, by means of which the reader can find any passage in any of the Plays or Poems. No Concordance of Shakespeare can be bought for less than $6.00, and this volume is worth more to the reader than a Concordance. We will also give with this edition a Plan for the Study of each Play, with Study Questions and Suggestions. This Method of Study is invaluable to students.

Yesterday marked the end of the first week of the existence of the BOSTON AMERICAN. Its average circulation was 207,480 per after deducting all free papers, exchanges, papers for files, samples and excessive print. The BOSTON AMERICAN thanks Boston and New England for this new record in the creation of newspapers.

GOIMERS' PLEA FOR LABOR.

When the chained slave in the South appealed to God and man for human freedom, the slave master wanted to be let alone. When pain was grinding Cuba's life blood out and the United States heard the cry of the persecuted, Spain wanted to be let alone. The dog gnawing at a bone (Wants to be let alone.) The trust magnate (Wants to be let alone.) The modern Moslem grinding the bones of the toilers today, (Wants to be let alone.) I want to say they won't be let alone! Every labor organization in America asks for the enactment of this eight-hour bill and we respectfully ask you to report it favorably and to press it to enactment during this session of Congress. It will be a measure for the benefit of the whole people.

The attention that James "Tandy" Pitts has won as "Tandy in the Street" has not prevented him from being busy on the pavement.

The tragedy took place at the intersection of the Erie Canal and Smith streets, where, of the 100 or so people, most of them of various ages, and of various businesses, Mike's was the only one. During the time of the accident, Mike was not there, and he has no such comment.

Tandy was unloading cans of sardines when Mike entered a car of three took two or three cans of sardines and a sardine can and turned back and toward Mike.

Some of the witnesses who were perfectly still, but did not move, were the two men in the car's antiplunge from the car.

Tandy, a fat man and a man with a pocket full of sardines, was not hurt.

KNOCKOUT THE A. A. J. BOUNTS

Hughie McQuirk, South Boston, Sends John Boyle, Roxbury,
to the Floor With a Blow
That Ends Their Battle

OTHER CONTESTS IN RING OF ORDINARY CHARACTER

Coming from a long street to the pit of the A. A. J. boxing hall, South Boston men John Boyle of Boston and Hughie McQuirk of South Boston met in a boxing ring which was the feature of the big business at the A. A. J. boxing hall of Northampton last night.

John Boyle, a tall, dark man, was met by Hughie McQuirk, a smaller, lighter man, who was known to the crowd as the "Fighting Irish".

Boyle was met by McQuirk in the second round of the fight. The two men fought a hard battle, but Boyle was knocked out by McQuirk in the third round.

Was Carried from the Ring.

Boyle was carried from the ring, not in arms, when the bell rang for the third round. Finally, after the excitement of the fight, Boyle was carried from the ring by two men.

Boyle was taken to the hospital, where he was treated for a concussion of the brain. He is expected to recover.

The fight between Boyle and McQuirk was a hard one, and it was a surprise to many of the crowd that Boyle was knocked out so early in the fight.

It Was All One Sided.

Following this was another boxing match between John Boyle and Hughie McQuirk. This time Boyle was knocked out in the first round.

The fight was a one-sided affair, and Boyle was unable to defend himself against McQuirk's attacks.

Boyle was taken to the hospital, where he was treated for a concussion of the brain. He is expected to recover.

The body is made up of many different parts, and each part has its own function. The body is a complex system, and it is important to understand how it works.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are a natural remedy for all stomach disorders and weakness. They possess exactly the same properties that have been found in the juices and other digestive fluids of the stomach and other digestive glands of the human body. They actually do the digestive work of the stomach and regulate that organ and its movements and functions.

Men. Harry F. Loomis, 412 First Ave., Milwaukee, Wis., writes: "Several years ago I was afflicted with a severe case of dyspepsia. At times I was subject to serious attacks and I remember one time when I was to take an important business trip when I had taken suddenly ill. I had a violent headache and felt very ditty and everything on mind to leave for the day. I could not put off my trip and so I took a few of your friends recommended Bryant's Dyspepsia Tablets. I immediately got a box and took some and soon was entirely relieved and suffered no pain at all. I continued to take them and in a very short time was completely cured. I have never had another attack since. I regard this as a great benefit to me. I have given my Dyspepsia Tablets as a gift to several of my friends. I can assure you that they are a real cure for stomach trouble and all who suffer could know as I do, what they will do.

HORSE SHOW AT GOSHEN.

BRANTOWN FANS MARCH.

There will be a two-day show in Goshen, from September 30 to October 1. A large number of entries have already been made. Lively racing is promised.

Some of the fans think it will be just as easy as falling off a log for the Boston Americans to win the second successive championship of the American League.

FLURRY AMONG THE COTTON SHORTS, PRICES UP.

Sharp Recovery Result of Publication of Bullish Ginner's Report and the Better Demand for Spot Cotton

New York, March 26.—There was a repetition of yesterday's flurry among the shorts in cotton today, owing to Liverpool making a full report on its crop and the better demand for spot cotton.

COFFEE MARKET QUIET.

New York, March 26. Coffee market quiet.

JOHN F. EVERHARDT

BURJ. J. AT MALDEN

Private funeral services for John Burj, Jr., son of John Burj, Sr., will be held at 10 o'clock on Monday, March 28, at the residence of the deceased, 100 North Main street, Malden.

THE DECEASED WAS A FATHER OF SEVEN CHILDREN, AND HAD ONLY ONE SON, JOHN BURJ, JR., WHO WAS BORN IN 1870. HE WAS A MEMBER OF THE MALDEN FIRE DEPARTMENT, AND A MEMBER OF THE MALDEN GOLF AND COUNTRY CLUB.

SHORT INTEREST A GOOD LEVER.

New York, March 26.—It is quite evident from the course of the market and the news disseminated on the subject of the New York banks, that the "bulling" process is in progress. The public was not attracted by the statement of the New York banks, which showed a record of $1,000,000,000 in loans.

The score over an alleged war between the bulls and the bears in the North-western market was a prominent feature in the market. The bulls were victorious, and the bears were defeated.

Refuse to do Truckmen's Work—Messenger Boys Carry Typewriters.

Washington, March 26.—A provision for the truckmen's work was made by the truckmen's union, which is now in the process of being adopted.

STOLE TO KEEP HIS MOTHER FROM STARVING.

Lad is Arraigned for Theft for Keeping Wolf from Door.

Stapleton, N. J., March 26. William J. Stapleton, a 14-year-old boy, was arraigned today for the theft of a wolf from the door of his mother's house.
